The Crucible of a Dark Age

*"We shall fight for every last world, every last city and to the last bolt in our arsenal.
In victory Horus shall be a master only of rain and the corpse of a dead realm."*

Attr. Miran Gilraates, Military Advisor to the Palatine Lords of Beta-Garron

The Garmon Cluster was the graveyard of the Imperium.

Here, billions upon billions of lives were thrown into the raging fires of Horus' ambition and Dorn's desperation, discarded without thought or pause to feed the fighting that was consuming the dominion of Mankind. A realm, once powerful and prosperous, was reduced to ruin; its triumphs laid low and people slaughtered at the whim of distant warlords and generals. This was the fate of the Imperium writ in blood for all to see, a grim and fearful darkness of eternal war.

For Horus to rise all the realms of Gaermon must endure that fate, and for the Imperium to live there at least some fragment of Gaermon's broken glory must survive. Dorn, the Senseschal of Terra, had seen the inhuman cost already paid to hold the Garmon Cluster, had heard the name by which history would refer to this folly. Yet, even he could not stop that which was now underway, only feed the flames of death and war in the hope that it would consume his enemies even as it did his servants. To that end he would throw his own brothers, Sangheims and Jaghatai, into the crucible.

This was the bitter end of the Horus Heresy, the last reward due those that had blackened the Emperor's dream of unity.

This was the Great Slaughter in all its terrible glory.
